WORKING PAPERS

[1] Property Tax Sales, Private Capital, and Gentrification in the U.S.

Awarded Russell Sage Foundation Presidential Grant

Best Paper Award at 2023 FMA Napa/Sonoma Finance Conference

Local governments recover revenues from overdue tax bills by auctioning off super senior claims to homes at semi-annual tax lien or tax deed sales. Using detailed data on over 18,000 tax lien sales linked to owners' overdue tax payment histories, I document tax liens sell at a much larger haircut than mortgage foreclosed homes – for less than 10% of ex ante assessed value in the vast majority of cases. Prices of homes neighboring a tax lien sale property, on average, decline within the first two years of the sale. However, in gentrifying areas, large positive pricing spillovers emerge within three years, driven by investors' conversion of former tax lien properties into luxury housing and commercial amenities. Underrepresented minority homeowners are more likely to be displaced by tax delinquency and less likely to transact homes in areas containing recent tax sales to institutional buyers. Private capital's entry into the municipal finance ecosystem has amplified gentrification and the within-city Black-white wealth gap.

Homer Hoyt Institute Best Paper Award at AsRES-AREUEA Tokyo Conference

Growing spatial inequality has led policymakers to enact tax breaks to attract corporate investment and jobs to economically peripheral regions. We demonstrate the importance of multi-plants' physical capital structure for the efficacy of place-based policies by studying a national bonus depreciation scheme in Japan which altered the relative cost of capital across locations, offering high-tech manufacturers immediate cost deductions from their corporate income tax bill. Combining corporate balance sheets with a registry containing investment by plant location and asset type, we find the policy generated big gains in employment and investment in building construction and in machines at pre-existing production sites, resulting in a welfare gain of $56.72 billion, or roughly 40% of one year's worth of average annual corporate profits. For eligible firms, plant-level hiring in ineligible areas outstripped that in eligible areas, suggesting reallocation of resources within firms' internal capital and labor markets mitigates the spatial misallocation inherent in subsidizing low productivity areas.

[3] Spatially Targeted LTV Policies and Collateral Values

(joint with Chun-Che Chi & Ming-Jen Lin)

Many governments regulate household leverage at a national level, even when credit and housing market conditions vary substantially across locations. We explore the efficacy of loan-to-value (LTV) limits targeted towards specific neighborhoods as a macroprudential policy designed to curb local house price growth. We combine administrative data from Taiwan covering the universe of mortgage loans, personal income tax returns, a public database of geocoded housing transactions, and bank balance sheets. Applying a series of matched difference-in-differences and border difference-in-discontinuity designs, we find that leverage limits are effective at reducing local house prices compared to alternative policy instruments such as transfer taxes, with no effects on delinquency rates. We uncover two kinds of efficiency costs associated with place-based mortgage restrictions: (i) commuting costs driven by homeowners sorting into neighborhoods where credit is easier to obtain, and (ii) mispricing due to banks and prospective homebuyers reporting inflated appraisals to avoid the limits.
